IN HERMANN COLLECTION

Many Old Masters and Modern Paintings to Go Under Hammer Here.

A sale of paintings by old masters, in cluding an important example of Rembrandt, is announced by the American Art Association. The association has been instructed by Bernhard F. Hermann. David T. Davis and Arthur M. Hees, executors of the late Mrs. Sara Hermann, to sell at unrestricted auction, the paintings collected by her husband, the ate Ferdinand Hermann, a connoisseur and for many years a member of the banking house of Speyer & Co.

There are more than seventy pictures the collection, and besides the old asters, were are some fine primitives and modern works of special quality.
The majority of the old masters and primitives came to Mr. Hermann through the Kleinberger Galleries, and bear es-tablished records of authenticity. The Rembrandt, which is the feature of the collection, is the "Prophet Balaam and the Angel," and it is signed with the artist's early monogram "RH" and is dated 1628. This work was formerly in the Galerie Gustav Ritter Hoschek.

Jacob Scholom B. Abramovitz, "the Jewish Cervantes," known throughou the world as the grandfather of Yiddis! literature, died at Odessa, his home friendly audience, which she entertained on a stage handsomely decorated with greens suggestive of the Christmas season. Miss Stanley is, of course, no stranger to the local musical public. She has sung here in opers and in orchestral concerts as well as in recital.

Her entertainment yesterday was most where he was for many years principal Her entertainment yesterday was most pleasing. The programme was well varied in content and provided the singer plentiful opportunity for the display of her excellences. Miss Stanley is a singer of merit and of charm. She has a lovely, fresh and sympathetic voice which seems to be suited equally to the polished or florid airs of the old schools and the moderns.

Her technic is better than it was when she was heard here first in opera, which is, of course, greatly to her credit. She showed musicianly understanding in her phrasing of Orlandinia. His daugh-ter, Bertha, is the wife of Senator Underwood. His first notable work in literature was published in 1860, when he was 25 It was a series of articles under the title of "The Proper Verdict," which severely criticised the Jewish literature of that day. These articles caused a great sen-sation and resulted in hitter denunciation of the writer, the large majority of his or the writer, the large majority of his readers refusing at the time to accept his new thought and aggressive spirit.

While "The Proper Verdict" articles were full of humor, still in them there was much deep thought, and the outcry of the public against his teaching only made Abramovitz more severe in each succeeding article, though all of which was an arraignment of the Jews as a race for not being more aggressive in both their life and their leterature. Next he startled the Jewish reading public in 1878 when he published his first story entitled "The Travels of Benjamin the Third." In this story he dealt with what he termed the non-progressive spirit of the Jew. The story was written around a young Lew who Major Menzies served in the civil war as a soldler and later was praduated as a midshipman from the Naval Academy His last poet with the Navy Department was as Lieutenant-Commander of the Portsmouth Navy Yard.
